

Supporting documentation (some documents only contain relevant pages):

- 1) Original paper by Zeigler et al. (2002) describing D. chamaensis as a new species of Desmotosuchus (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by authors).
- 2) Follow-up paper after my 2003 visit and discussion with NMMNH staff by Heckert et al. (2003) reinforcing assignment of species to Desmotosuchus (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by authors).
- 3) Published abstract Parker (2003) claiming that material belongs to new genus.
- 4) Published abstract by Stocker et al. (2004) claiming that material belongs to new genus. This abstract is cited in many subsequent papers by NMMNS staff.
- 5) Review of submitted manuscript from Parker and Irmis by Dr. Spencer Lucas dated April 2, 2005 where he comments on idea that material represents a new genus.
- 6) 2005 paper by Parker and Irmis in bulletin edited by Dr. Lucas, claiming that material belongs to a new genus.
- 7) 2005 paper in same volume by Drs. Heckert, Lucas, and Hunt acknowledging my hypothesis but rejecting it (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by authors).
- 8) Another 2005 paper by Heckert et al. assigning material to Desmotosuchus.
- 9) Another 2005 paper by Parker stating that material represents new genus.
- 10) December 28, 2006 paper by Lucas et al. providing new genus name for material (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by authors).
- 11) Paper by Parker (2007) published online on Jan. 2, 2007 providing new name for material.
- 12) 2004 reference by Dr. Heckert that I had discovered that Revueltosaurus was not a dinosaur (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by NMMNH staff).
- 13) March 2005 abstract stating that Revueltosaurus is not a dinosaur.
- 14) Subsequent abstract (May, 2005) by Drs. Hunt and Lucas claiming independent discovery that Revueltosaurus was not a dinosaur.
- 15) May 2005 publication by Parker et al announcing that Revueltosaurus is not a dinosaur.
- 16) Subsequent paper by Hunt et al describing material of Revueltosaurus but referring to May 2005 abstract as primary authority (NMMNH Bulletin, edited by authors).